Key Takeaways

Cable tray accessories include hangers, supports, splicers, clamps, elbows, tees, and covers, with prices varying by material, size, and duty rating. Types of Cable Tray Accessories1. Cable Tray Hangers and Supports: These are used to suspend or support cable trays from ceilings, walls, or other structures.

Hangers maintain horizontal runs, while supports and brackets provide stability and prevent sagging. They are available in light, medium, and heavy-duty versions depending on the load and installation requirements. 2.

Splicers and Couplers: Splicers join two sections of cable trays seamlessly, ensuring structural integrity. Couplers and connecting plates allow for smooth transitions between tray sections. 3.

Directional Fittings: Elbows, bends, tees, crosses, risers, and reducers help route cables around corners, changes in elevation, or varying tray widths. These fittings are essential for complex cable layouts. 4.

Clamps, Hold-Downs, and Cover Accessories: Clamps secure tray covers to protect cables from dust, water, or accidental damage. Hold-downs stabilize trays in high-vibration environments. Cover clamps and locks ensure safety and cable integrity.

5. Miscellaneous Accessories: Plastic nuts, bolts, swift clips, cable cleats, suspension rods, cross arms, and system dividers are used for fastening, organizing, and customizing cable tray installations.

Materials

Cable tray accessories are commonly made from galvanized steel, stainless steel, aluminum alloy, or fiberglass-reinforced plastic (FRP). Material choice affects durability, corrosion resistance, and suitability for indoor or outdoor environments.

Price Ranges

Prices vary based on material, size, and duty rating: Light-duty accessories (small clamps, basic brackets): approximately $5–$20 per pieceMedium-duty accessories (splicers, hold-downs, tees, elbows): approximately $15–$50 per pieceHeavy-duty accessories (large hangers, structural supports, reinforced elbows): approximately $50–$150+ per piece Specialized or custom-fabricated accessories may cost more, and bulk orders often reduce per-unit pricing.
